HEADLINE

„Lost in Berlin“ – The city keeps dancing. But at what price? Falk Karrasch publishes a non-fiction book about Berlin nightlife between freedom, intoxication and displacement.

LEAD

Berlin keeps dancing – but who owns the night? With „Lost in Berlin“, author and bartender Falk Karrasch presents a socially critical look at Berlin club culture: between ecstasy and commercialisation, between freedom and displacement, between tourism and identity. The book asks what remains of the legendary freedom of the Berlin night – and who can still afford it.

WRITTEN FROM INSIDE THE SCENE

Karrasch does not write about Berlin club culture because he researched it – he works right in the middle of it. For around ten years the native of Weissenfels (born 1989) has lived in Berlin, working behind the bars of the city. Before that he lived in Leipzig and worked internationally as a model, including for Chanel. His perspective: first-hand observations, night after night.

BOOK TOPICS

Club culture and techno tourism · commercialisation and displacement · queer community · bodyshaming and beauty ideals · drug prevention and safer night · loss, grief and self-worth in the night.
